Anne, Duchess of Cumberland, Portrait by Gainsborough . . . . . 162

The Integrity of Great American Art Collections Largely Due to the Integrity of the Dealers Who Helped Form Them . . . . . 163

An interesting dissertation on the important relation in which the dealer stands to the art collector. The opinion is expressed that the reputable dealer is the friend and reliable guide of the collector and that without his aid it practically is impossible to form a collection that will stand the test of searching criticism by an expert. There is much matter for reflection in this article.

Anne, Duchess of Cumberland . . . . . 186

Some facts regarding the beautiful woman whose portrait by Gainsborough, Mr. Henry E. Huntington recently has added to his already fine collection.
